Each ramp that is constructed for individuals with disabilities has to be specialized to meet the need of the person requesting the ramp, type of mobility device, structure and appearance of the home. The ramps have to pass local inspections guidelines of each city.

A ramp constructed in Fairborn for a little girl in a wheelchair did not pass inspection because the ramp extended out into the driveway that led to the garage. The inspector was concerned that vehicles would run over it. After the landlady looked at the ramp she asked if the builder could install hardware in which the family could bend the ramp upward and have it not interfere with any cars entering the garage. After the builder installed the hardware on the ramp; the city inspector was pleased with the solution and the ramp passed the inspection.
